Fallen Comrades Memorial

On May 15, 2000 a new memorial was dedicated at the Fish and Wildlife Service's National Conservation Training Center (NCTC) in Shepherdstown, West Virginia. The Fallen Comrades Memorial was an initiative of the Service's Heritage Committee to help ensure that those who made the ultimate sacrifice would never be forgotten. NCTC is the new home of the Service for both current and former employees and hence a fitting location for a memorial to those former colleagues who died in the service of American conservation. The memorial wall and the names of our fallen comrades are already mounted. The courtyard will also consist of a brick walkway and a statue commemorating those selfless individuals who died protecting America's fish and wildlife resources.

We are asking your help to carry out the completion of this project. The wall of names was only the first stage of the planned memorial. The wall was envisioned as being surrounded by a courtyard for reflection on our fallen comrades and consideration of how best to fulfill their legacy. To finish the courtyard and commission a bronze commemorative statue we are asking those with a connection to the Service to help us finish the job. Please help us by sponsoring an inscribed brick and, in the process, perhaps remembering another fallen friend or recognizing the support of yourself or your institution. Our hope is that the courtyard will represent the larger community that has helped us protect our nation's resources.
